Magtech Moving to Pearland

PEARLAND, Texas - The Pearland Economic Development Corporation (PEDC) recently announced Magtech, a world leader in magnetic level control, is relocating its corporate headquarters and manufacturing facility to Pearland, Texas.

Magtech plans to break ground later this month on a new 30,000-square-foot facility located at 3902 Magnolia. The company, which manufactures liquid-level gauges, switches and transmitters primarily for the petrochemical and processing industries, has been located in Webster, Texas since 1984.

The PEDC helped Magtech secure a $135,000 incentive package to facilitate this relocation. The grant will be distributed in four installments over three years. After the first installment of $50,000, Magtech must provide at least 30 jobs per year for three years in order to receive the remaining grant installments. The company currently employs 50 individuals.

In addition, the PEDC will assist the company in applying for city and county tax abatements in the future.

"The PEDC played a big part in helping us make our relocation decision," said Jodie Bernier, president of Magtech. "We wanted a closer location to Houston, but not within the city limits. We interviewed other surrounding cities, but none as eager and supportive as Pearland. They helped us find several pieces of property, along with securing the incentive package. I have always liked the city and now I am very excited to have Magtech as part of the business community."

The Pearland relocation site will double the size of Magtech's current facility and feature a variety of modernizations including more automated fabrication equipment, state-of-the-art welding stations and enhanced IT capacity. It will also include an on-site training facility.

Expect to see Magtech employees moving in to their new facility in early 2008.
